In my repulse of the enemy on that day, my command lost in twenty minutes over nine hundred men killed and wounded. Mine was the second line, and did not yield an inch. I cannot be held respensible for the first line, nor for the orders of Major-Gen. Reynolds to me to hold the position in the general line I had, without pursuing the repulsed etemy. I was a subordinate to Gen. Reynolds, and as he was on the field superintending the movement, and receiving orders from superior Headcasions delighted with the conduct of my command, I consider your statement as a very unjust charge against a dirision that has always done its duty.
